

NEW YORKISMS.

From our own Correspondent.

New York, Aug. 4. Life in lodgings was never more brilliantly exemplified than it was on Sunday evening, or rather at from 1 to 2 o'clock yesterday morning, in one of the quietest and easiest of the "Places" that abound not far from either Broadway or Fifth Avenue.

Stand and heavy people give the tone to Belfair Place, and have given tone to it for several lustres. Bachelors in declining years, unmarried clergymen, literary men of medium rank, steady-going bankers who have no great penchant for trained racers or risky speculations, wealthy and spotless widows, rearing young sons and belonging to good old families, childless husbands and wives who have grown old together, and, after the one disappointment of their lives, learned to care very little for pleasures outside the solidly magnificent suite of rooms which constitute their home—these are the kind of people who for many a year have conferred infinite respectability upon Belfair Place.

Imagine, then, the moral thunder-shock which has just been given to that grim neighborhood by the clairvoyance which commenced one hour after last Sunday midnight.

What has since come to light reveals that several months ago a fair-faced and dexter-haired feuilletoniste, one of the best of the class of New York Bohemians, managed by his perfect manners and quiet insinuating mode of speech (for he gave no references) to obtain a front room on the third or uppermost story of one of the most respectable of these very respectable houses.

Hattie Bell is the pretty name of a pretty girl fifteen years old, who has been living with her father on one of the East river canal boats, (one of the adjoining boats lived a woman, Mary Ann Bardwell by name. One evening recently, the woman Bardwell, who appears to have for some time cherished a mysterious spite against her victim, enticed the young girl to a lonely spot, and there induced her to take an apparently innocuous drink, but which almost instantly reduced her to a state of insensibility.

While in this forlorn condition, the woman Bardwell is charged with having stripped the young girl of every article of clothing, and then to have left her to her fate. Fortunately, and surprisingly, considering the place where this outrage was perpetrated, no worse fate befel the harmless little Hattie than that of being found by some Samaritan-hearted men, who called a physician and assisted him to restore her to consciousness.

The young girl, with perplexed emotions of distress and shame, gave as distinct an account as she was able of all that she remembered. The woman Bardwell was immediately arrested, and arraigned before Justice Hogan, of the Tombs, who referred the matter to the Coroner, who deciding that the case did not come within his jurisdiction, said so to the officers, who handed her over to the authorities of the New Street Police Station, who locked her up there, and so finished the official rigmarole. Meanwhile she keeps mum and refuses to say a word that may shed light upon the reasons for the administration of the drug. Had the perpetrator been a man, no explanation would be needed; and surely Mary's notion could not be only that of obtaining a suit of clothes of but little worth.

Since murder possesses the quality of making the blood run cold, the sufferers from heat must have found at least a little alleviation in the recent police columns of the morning papers here. Another case of probable murder was fished up on Sunday morning, out of a sunken boat in the Morris Canal, at the foot of Bergea street, Jersey City. At 6 o'clock, on Saturday night, Carson Setzman, a man of thirty-five, employed in a sugar-house in that vicinity, received his wages in common with the rest of the employees. How he spent the rest of the evening is not precisely known, but towards midnight he was seen in the liquor-saloon of a man named Adaline. This is the last that is certainly known of him until he was found, at 6 o'clock on Sunday morning, lying in the sunken boat with his face down, and a scalp wound six inches long behind the left ear. The inquest is to be continued this morning, but all the testimony as yet elicited is that a watchman who guards a coal-yard near the sugar-house heard the cry of "Help! help!" at one o'clock on Sunday morning, and that one hour after a woman residing near, saw two men striking another man they heard between them, and heard them agree to "fix him off," as they dragged him towards the sugar-house, that overlooks the canal. The fact of the murder being committed within a few hours of Setzman's receiving his pay, renders it little doubtful that it was done for anything else than the money.

Shall I apologize for the mention of Mr. Cruelly-to-Animals Bergh again? No; for he has been making himself absurd by the publication of one of the most ridiculous letters that ever emanated from the pen of a man. One moment he seems to approve of horse-dish eating; another he declares that the largest share of the moral and physical diseases which affect mankind is due to the slaughtering and devouring of animals; anon he avows, with the quaintest candor, that he eats meat from habit, but that the slightest appearance of blood (such as in underdone beefsteak) shocks his sensibilities, and causes his stomach to revolt. Add to this that he owns to having tolerated a poor Arab's running behind his horse a distance of twelve miles, and the question may well be asked whether Mr. Bergh does or does not include the human family ("cheerful Arabs" among the rest) in the list of animals? In Brooklyn during the month of July more than one hundred children, or nearly four a day, were lost and returned to their parents by the police. Ought not this to remind us that while we are imitating many of the good institutions of Paris, we have as yet failed to imitate her admirable institution of the crèche, or home for the little ones, where parents, at a small expense, leave their children at morning and return for them at night? Half the accidents that happen to children arise while their parents are away, and the little ones are conduced to careless and incompetent hands. There has indeed been, for a long time, a movement on foot for some such establishment here; but the foot has been a very lame one, and consequently but little or nothing has been done.

You will have noticed that for some weeks past great pains have been taken to assure the public that the liguature uniting the Siamese twins is shortly to be cut by somebody of the French College of Surgeons. I observe, though, that before that interesting operation is performed, they intend giving a season of recitations in the United States. The assiduity with which the announcements are made calls to mind the "farewell-farewells" which certain artists announce towards the close of a particularly remunerative season. Such vaudeville-advances are always cheerful, because we feel morally certain the star will never take leave of the public until the public takes leave of him; but will return from season to season as long as a manager can be found to give an engagement. Is it not therefore conjecturable that when these amiable twins present themselves at the French College of Surgeons, it will be found impossible to sever them without the absolute certainty of death to both? At any rate they will soon figure at Wood's Museum here (late Baynard's Opera House), which Miss Maggie Mitchell is to open on the 31st.
